Where are School Districts on the Road to Academic Recovery? What Comes Next?

February 15, 3PM Eastern | 12PM Pacific

In the wake of three years of disrupted learning, student academic achievement has started to rebound across the country. But in many districts, more catch-up is needed to reach pre-pandemic levels of achievement. What should we make of where we are on the road to academic recovery and what it implies for the future?

In this CALDER webinar we'll hear from two experts studying school district improvement efforts up close and in real-time.

We hope you'll join us on February 15 to learn from Emily Morton and Carly Robinson as they discuss the challenges and opportunities surrounding academic improvement now and into the future.

Emily Morton is a research scientist at NWEA and a lead researcher on the Road to COVID Recovery project.

Carly Robinson is a Postdoctoral Research Associate at the Annenberg Institute at Brown University. She also works with the National Student Support Accelerator to study and support high-impact tutoring interventions.
